Re: Equal Credit Opportunity Adverse Action Requirements
*[Regulation B; Docket No. R-1408]

Dear Ms. Johnson:

The American Financial Services Association (“AFSA”) appreciates the opportunity to comment on the proposed Equal Credit Opportunity rule (“Proposed Rule”) by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (“Board”). AFSA is the national trade association for the consumer credit industry, protecting access to credit and consumer choice. Its 350 members include consumer and commercial finance companies, auto finance/leasing companies, mortgage lenders, mortgage servicers, credit card issuers, industrial banks and industry suppliers.

The Proposed Rule relates to section 1100F (“Section 1100F”) of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (“Dodd-Frank Act”), which amends section 615(a) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (“FCRA”). AFSA supports the Board’s action to provide model adverse action notice language for creditors implementing Section 1100F. AFSA similarly supports the Board’s interpretation that Section 1100F applies only to credit scores obtained from a consumer reporting agency (“CRA”). Unfortunately, several aspects of Section 1100F remain unclear. AFSA therefore asks the Board to clarify Section 1100F’s requirements in the following circumstances: (i) when creditors obtain multiple credit scores and/or consumer reports, (ii) when two or more applicants apply jointly, and (iii) when a creditor obtains a consumer report containing a credit score, but does not use that score in making its decision. AFSA further requests certain clarification of the proposed model language with respect to these circumstances. Also, AFSA requests that the Board allow additional time for compliance with the Proposed Rule. Finally, AFSA suggests that the Board devise a single model form that includes all of the information that must be disclosed in a credit score exception notice and in an adverse action that complies with Section 1100F’s amendments to 615(a) of the FCRA.

The Board Correctly Interprets Section 1100F to Apply Only to Credit Scores Obtained from a Consumer Reporting Agency

When evaluating a credit application, the creditor may rely on a credit score, such as a FICO score, obtained from a CRA; a score the creditor calculates using its own proprietary model; or both a third party score and a proprietary score. AFSA understands the Board’s position to be that a credit score obtained from a CRA is within Section 1100F’s scope. However, if creditor calculates a credit score using its own proprietary scoring model, then that score is not within Section 1100F's scope. If the proprietary score model uses information obtained from a CRA, including score information, the proprietary score still need not be disclosed to the customer. Instead the score obtained from the CRA should be disclosed.

This interpretation of Section 1100F is both the best interpretation of the statutory text and the best policy for consumers and creditors. Section 1100F applies to a "numerical credit score as defined in section 609(f)(2)(A) [of the FCRA]." By referencing this definition, Congress indicated its intent that Section 1100F applies to scores obtained from a CRA, but not to proprietary scores. Section 609(f) allows a consumer to request his or her credit score from a CRA. Congress intended this provision to allow consumers to request widely distributed credit scores that would assist them in understanding credit scoring.<sup>1</sup> Furthermore, by incorporating the requirement to disclose the name of the person providing the score, Section 1100F assumes that a third party will provide the score.<sup>2</sup>

Moreover, construing Section 1100F as requiring the disclosure of proprietary scores would not benefit consumers. A proprietary score typically is calculated in the context of a particular transaction, and thus may not necessarily be representative of the consumer's overall creditworthiness.<sup>3</sup> Additionally, because the calculation methods and ranges of propriety scores are not consistent from creditor to creditor, a consumer could not use disclosures made under Section 1100F to compare his or her scores across creditors and across time. Regulation B already requires creditors to provide adverse action reasons regarding why a consumer had a lower proprietary score. Therefore, expanding Section 1100F to cover such scores is more likely to confuse consumers by providing extraneous information than to be helpful. Consequently, AFSA believes that the Board has correctly interpreted Section 1100F to apply only to scores obtained from a CRA.

Clarification Should Be Provided Regarding When Multiple Consumer Reporting Agencies and/or Multiple Credit Scores Are Obtained

The Board's model language assumes that creditors will obtain information from only one CRA, and thus that only one CRA will be listed on the adverse action notice. In practice, creditors may obtain multiple consumer reports and disclose the name, address, and other information currently required by section 615(a) of the FCRA with respect to each CRA on the adverse action notice. Similarly, creditors may obtain multiple credit scores in connection with those reports. The Board's current model language does not contemplate these circumstances.

<sup>1</sup> See 149 Cong. Rec. 175, at E2514 (Dec. 8, 2003) ("Credit scores are to be derived from models that are widely distributed in connection with mortgage loans or more general models that assist consumers in understanding credit scoring, and must include a disclosure to the consumer stating that the information and credit scoring model may be different than that used by a particular lender.") (remarks of Rep. Oxley providing a section-by-section explanation of the Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003).

<sup>2</sup> Note that a person calculating and providing a credit score to another person qualifies as a consumer reporting agency under the FCRA.

<sup>3</sup> For example, if a creditor's proprietary model considers down payment, then an unusually high or low down payment may cause the applicant's score from the proprietary model to be materially higher or lower than a generic score obtained from a CRA.

First, AFSA requests that the new model language in Appendix C, or the Official Staff Commentary to Appendix C, recognize that a creditor may need to replace the general reference to “this consumer reporting agency” with a more specific reference to the CRA from which the creditor obtained the score being disclosed. This reference might be the name of the particular CRA or language that otherwise clarifies which the CRAs disclosed in the adverse action notice provided the score. Such a change would better accommodate circumstances where a creditor has based its decision on reports from multiple CRAs.

Second, AFSA requests clarification regarding a creditor’s obligations when it obtains multiple credit scores in connection with an application. Specifically, AFSA requests that the Board adopt the same rule for adverse action notices that it has adopted for risk-based pricing notices. Proposed section 222.73(d) of Regulation V requires creditors to make disclosures regarding the score used by the creditor, if a single score is identifiable, or one of the score, if the creditor did not use one score in particular.<sup>4</sup> Because the same issue arises for adverse action notices, the Board should adopt a similar interpretation to provide consistency. Section 1100F’s statutory text, which applies to “a” numerical credit score, supports such an interpretation, and it would resolve the ambiguity regarding creditors’ obligations in this circumstance.

The Board Should Clarify Section 1100F’s Requirements for Co-Applicants

When two or more applicants apply jointly, Regulation B only requires that a creditor provide an adverse action notice to one applicant – specifically the primary applicant if one is readily apparent.<sup>5</sup> However, each applicant must receive the disclosures required by Section 615(a) of the FCRA.<sup>6</sup> Because Section 1100F amends section 615(a) of the FCRA, creditors also will be required to provide Section 1100F’s disclosures to each applicant.

AFSA requests that the Board clarify the information that creditors should disclose, and to whom it should be disclosed, when there are one or more co-applicants. Because Section 1100F does not contemplate multiple applicants, its application to joint applicants is ambiguous. It could be interpreted as requiring creditors to provide each applicant whose score was used in making the credit decision with his or her particular score. Alternatively, Section 1100F could be interpreted as requiring a creditor to disclose every applicant’s credit score to each of the applicants. AFSA believes that the former interpretation is more reasonable and that the latter interpretation would raise significant privacy concerns. Therefore, AFSA suggests that the Board clarify that Section 1100F requires creditors to provide each applicant with his or her own personal credit score, if the creditor used that score in making the credit decision, but not the scores of other applicants.

Section 1100F Should Not Apply if a Creditor Uses a Consumer Report, But Not a Credit Score

Creditors may obtain a consumer report that includes a credit score, but not use the the score when making a credit decision. For example, a creditor automatically may obtain a credit report and score when an application is submitted, but deny the application for reasons unrelated to the score, such as the applicant appearing on the SDN list.

The Board acknowledges that creditors need not provide disclosures under Section 1100F unless they use a credit score. Specifically, the Proposed Rule states, “In some cases, a person who is required to provide an adverse action notice under the FCRA may use a consumer report, but not a credit score, in taking the adverse action. Under section 1100F of the Dodd-Frank Act, a person is not required to disclose a credit score and related information if a credit score is not used in taking the adverse action.”<sup>7</sup> AFSA requests clarification that making Section 1100F disclosures is not required when a creditor obtains, but does not use a credit score, in addition to when a creditor obtains a report without a score.

Additionally, there will be circumstances where it is ambiguous whether a creditor used a credit score. For example, if a creditor judgmentally evaluates a joint application, it may not always be clear whether the underwriter used the co-applicant’s credit score. To ensure compliance with Section 1100F, many creditors may prefer to disclose the applicant’s credit score (along with related information) whenever they receive a score as part of the application process. To facilitate this, the Board should change the new model language in Appendix C to, “We also obtained your credit score from this consumer reporting agency and may have used it in making our credit decision,” from, “We also obtained your credit score from this consumer reporting agency and used it in making our credit decision.” This would allow creditors to provide Section 1100F disclosures when there is some ambiguity regarding whether it was used in the credit decision without raising the question of whether the model language is accurate.

It also is important to note the contracts between creditors and CRAs sometimes restrict creditors’ ability to disclosure credit scores to consumers. AFSA recommends that the Board adopt language similar to section 609(g)(2) of the FCRA, which renders such restrictions void in connection with mortgage lenders’ obligation to disclose credit scores under section 609(g).

Effective Date

Section 1100H of the Dodd-Frank Act provides that the amendments in Subtitle H of Title X, which includes Section 1100F, become effective on a “designated transfer date.” Secretary of the Treasury has set the designated transfer date as July 21, 2011. However, since comments need to be submitted by April 14, and comments on the Paperwork Reduction Act analysis need to be submitted by May 16, it seems as though a final rule could not be published soon enough to give AFSA members adequate time to implement the rule.

Instead, we ask that the Board follow a similar procedure to the one it used when implementing the Mortgage Disclosure Improvement Act. The Board kept the effective date that was mandated by the statute, but moved the mandatory compliance date later. AFSA asks that the Board institute a mandatory compliance date of at least one year after the final rule is published in the Federal Register.

This additional time is necessary because it will take financial services companies much more than the 16 hours the Board estimates to update their systems to comply with the disclosure requirements in the Proposed Rule. In fact, 16 hours is a gross underestimate. AFSA members provided different estimates on how long it would take them to comply with the Proposed Rule. Because AFSA members vary in size, the length of time it would take to implement the Proposed Rule varies. One company estimated that it would take at least two weeks, another estimated that it would take 45 to 60 days, a third company said that it would take at least 390 hours, and a fourth company said it would take approximately 3500 hours, not including time for training employees. These estimates include reading and understanding the changes, programming and coding, and testing. None of these estimates is even close to the 16 hours that the Board estimated.

A Single Disclosure Form Should Be Provided for Creditors Who Rely on the Credit Score Exception to Comply with the Risk-Based Pricing Rule

Many creditors comply with the Risk-Based Pricing (“RBP”) Rule by providing a credit score exception notice (hereinafter “RBP Credit Score Notice”). Many of the creditors who use the RBP Credit Score Notice rely on the CRA not only for the relevant data, but also to prepare and present that data so that it can be readily inserted into a notice to be mailed to the consumer. Section 1100F creates a timing challenge because it will require similar information. However, when the creditor accesses the CRA data to evaluate a credit application, it will not yet know whether credit will be extended (thus triggering an RBP Credit Score Notice) or turned down (thus triggering an adverse action (“AA”) notice). The attached decision tree is provided to assist the reader in understanding the decision making process followed by a creditor and the points in that process that will trigger either an RBP credit score disclosure or an AA credit score disclosure.

It is critical that creditors, particularly smaller creditors, be able to obtain from the CRA in usable form all of the information that would be required in either the RBP Credit Score Notice or the AA notice.

Otherwise, creditors may be required to obtain consumer report information multiple times from the CRA. Therefore, the Board should devise a model form including all of the information that must be disclosed in either an RBP Credit Score Notice or an AA notice. This would allow a creditor to simply attach or merge the information sheet received from the CRA to either the creditor’s AA notice or the creditor’s RBP Credit Score Notice as applicable. Because there already is substantial overlap between the RBP Credit Score Notice and the information required by Section 1100F in AA notices, this approach should be readily understandable by applicants. Creditors would need to indicate whether adverse action was taken, but otherwise the same information would be provided to applicants.

Creating a model form that integrates the information in a RBP Credit Score Notice and an AA notice compliant with Section 1100F would provide a relatively simply implementation solution for creditors who provide RBP Credit Score Notices today. Whatever is done, the regulations SHOULD NOT require the creditor to go back to the CRA to obtain the requisite credit score disclosure information after the credit decision has been made. That would provide no benefit to consumers and place a significant burden on creditors.
